IMPORTANCE OF TRIFLES.

Small Things That Have Led to Momentous Results. From the Boston Journal,

No one underestimates the importance of trifles in these days of atention to details; still, it's difficult to appreclate the momentous results that certain small things may bring forth. There's a petite woman known to the writer, for instance, who is now a most successful teacher of languages Ten years ago she was so stender and small that, while her qualifications were admitted to be all that could be desired by the persons to whom she applied for a position, one and all decided that she was much too young to rule the scholars who would be under her control.

Finally, one day, the girl started out in desperation to make a visit to the principal of one of the largest schools in the city, and she felt so very disheartened that she put on a trailing black gown that had been discarded as too mature for one of her years, and a prim little bonnet hat well nigh covered her bronze hair, and so attired in consonance with her feelings, made a final appeal for work. This was a surcessful one.

Later the head of the academy told her that he had been misled into believing her much older than she was by her clothes, and that when he saw her next, looking younger than some of her scholars, his heart sank within him and he would have willingly canceled the bargain then and there if he could. Another frank woman admits that it is doubtful if she would ever have had a chance of accepting the man who afterward became her husband if it hadn't been for a new mode of hairdressing. It was a very fascinating method. this one, with many an enchanting curl and twist, and gazing on them, the youth's heart became entangled in the meshes and he impulsively asked the maid, whose crown of glory formed such a prety frame for her bewitching face, to marry him.

He, too, had an admission to make, and it is that next morning his heart sank within him when he thought of the step he'd taken. He stuck to it though, of course, and now he declares he's the happiest of married men. A long, soft-fristed glove made another man a benedict. He found it in his coat pocket, where a girl friend had stuck it one morning, and it looked so feminine and dainty and homelike in his bachelor apartments that he straightway went out and made an agreement with its owner by which he was to buy gloves and various other expensive articles for her the rest of her natural life. There's no use multiplying examples

The decay of religious sentimentwhich is to be observed in all those countries which are in the foremos rank as regards knowledge, and especially the growth of scientific flowledge -hus perhaps conduced more to th spread of suicide than any other single cause. That the decadence of orthodox belief is an important factor in the increase of self-murder is demonstrated in great cities like Paris, Berlin and Vienna, where agnosticism is rampant, and the greatest number Dr. Ireland traces the greater portion of the causes of suicide to sev re strain upon the nervous system which may be the outcome of a multiplicity of causes. Among these causes may be mentioned the increased strain of modern life upon the nervous system. The following are the mean annual rates per 1,000,000 population of some European countries: Saxony, 1861-79, suicides, 281; 1871-80, suicides, 325; 1881-84, suicides, 370; 1885-88, suicides, 313. It will be observed that with the exception of Norway the suicide mortality rate has increased, and in most countries very considerably within recent years. The diminution in Norway is attributed, says the Nineteenth Century Review, to the energetic attack which the Norwegian governm at has made on alcaholism. The same journal says that, in the case of Italy particularly, emigration accounts to some extent for the low rate prevailing there. It is evident that emigration provides an outlet for a great deal of misery and

The rate of suicide mortality in th United States is 1 in 35,000. 'Dr. D. R. Dowey finds that in the New England states since 1860 suicide has increased about 25 per cent.
